Whats the Difference Between Calor and Caliente in Spanish? As established before, calor is a noun that we use to talk about the weather or temperature. This word also allows you to express that a person feels warm due to the weather. So, calor is the Spanish equivalent of hot, heat or warm. En Mxico, el calor es muy fuerte en verano.In Mexico, the heat is quite strong in the summertime. Vamos por un helado? Tengo muchisimo calor!Should we go for ice cream? Im very hot! No manches, qu calor hace!Geez, its so warm today! On the other hand, caliente is an adjective. This means that we use this word to describe an objects or persons temperature. In Spanish, caliente can mean either hot or warm. Since temperature is a temporary characteristic, caliente works with the verb estar. Susy, vamos al doctor!Ests muy caliente!Susy, lets go to the doctor! Youre very warm! Toma tu caf, ten cuidado, est muy caliente.Here is your coffee, be careful, its very hot. Now that youve learned the key differences between these words, its time to see the contexts and the elements you need to know in order to use them correctly. What Does Calor Mean in Spanish In Spanish, calor is a masculine noun that we use to talk about the weather or the physical feeling that a person experiences when its exposed to the sun or high-temperatures. So, depending on how its used, calor can have different translations: Calor means heat or hot when talking about high temperatures related to the weather.Calor means warm when people talk about the physical feeling that high temperatures cause them.Calor means warmth when describing the energy or sensation that something hot emits. Here are some examples of how to apply this word in these situations: [Definite article] + calor Me gusta ms el fro que el calor. I like the cold more than the heat. El calor est muy intenso el da de hoy.The heat is very intense today. Me gusta ir a la playa y disfrutar del calor.I like going to the beach and enjoying the warmth. Gracias a las lluvias, el calor ha ido disminuyendo.Thanks to the rain, the heat has been decreasing. If instead, you want to use calor to describe the weather you can use the following structure. Notice that hacer can be conjugated to any tense as long as you use the third-singular person. You can also use adjectives to explain how hot the weather is. Hace + (adjective) + calor Oye, Mara, en Colombia hace mucho calor!Hey, Maria, is it too hot in Colombia? Lleva ropa ms ligera. En Mxico siempre hace calor.Take lighter clothes. In Mexico, its always hot. No dorm bien porque hizo bastante calor en la noche.I didnt sleep well because it was quite hot last night. Finally, here is the structure that you need to follow when using calor to talk about the physical feeling that the weather is causing you or someone else. In this context, youll use it with the verb tener. [Tener conjugated] + (adjective) + calor Qu clima tan horrible! Tengo mucho calor.The weather is awful! Im very hot. Tienes calor? For qu no vamos por un helado?Are you warm? Why dont we go for an ice cream? Maestra, podemos prender el aire acondicionado? Tenemos mucho calor.Professor, can we turn the air conditioner on? Were very hot. How & When to Use Caliente in Spanish In Spanish, caliente is an adjective that allows us to describe an objects or a persons temperature. As a result, this word means hot or warm. Here are some examples of how to use this word. Notice that if you want to mention how hot the object is, youll need to use adverbs: [Estar conjugated] + (adverb) + caliente Abre las ventanas! Est muy caliente aqu adentro!Open the windows! Its very hot in here! Te quemaste? Te dije que el agua estaba caliente!Did you burn yourself? I told you the water was hot!
