The British artist and Illustrator Edward Bawden nourished a permanent obsession for the Royal Botanic Gardens of Kew, on the outskirts of London. And those who do not fall for the park of 300 acres, seat of flowers and paths, greenhouses and greenenswards, a towering pagoda, the largest collection of plants in the world and the smallest of the royal buildings of England? Edward Bawden's Kew Gardens (V & A Publishing, $ 30) reproduces in its entirety an irresistibly fascinating guide to the gardens made by the band when he was a 19-year-old student at the Royal College of Art. The Peyton Skipwith and Brian Webb compilers tell the story Of Kew Together with Paintings and Prints Bawden made by the park and his visitors further in life, including the images taken from the artist's personal albums and on its idyllic posters for the London underground.
