Nbc sports live stream free online reddit

I have a secret. I live in Maryland but I love my New York teams (I'm that weird Mets, Jets, Knicks combo). I'm not a die-hard fan in that I rearrange my schedule because I must watch every game (good luck — that's 260 games combined), but I like catching a game when I can. (though these Jets games are getting harder and harder to watch year after year... this past year was a little better than expected but still brutal and this upcoming one... we shall see!) Since I'm out of market, I don't get a lot of the games on TV. I could buy each of the professional sports packages - NFL Sunday Ticket, MLB.TV, and NBA League Pass - but that'd be absurd. I'm not spending thousands to watch sports. Most of the time, I don't even watch. I'm not really missing much. If you're in a similar situation and want to catch a few games for free, here's how to do it with online streams. Before You Watch - Protect Yourself! Before I show you where — remember that these are unauthorized streams. You're about a foot into the darker, less than savory, parts of the web. Install an ad blocker and update your antivirus software, you will be inundated with ads and popups. My favorite antivirus is free - AVG - and I use AdBlock Pro on Google Chrome and I still get popups. You may also want to install a VPN, which stands for virtual private network, like HiddenVPN. This is a legal gray area. There often unauthorized streams. If you want to go legit, you could look at this list of 10 sites that pay you money and start doing some of those to help pay for the sports packages. They run into the hundreds of dollars a year. How to Find Live Sports Streams For a while, people used to go to the sites themselves. They had weird names, were hosted on international servers, and they would get taken down every so often. They were reliable until they weren't, so I never sought to dig any deeper. Then I realized that there is a community of people who must know of where the streams are. There is - it's Reddit. For any sport you can think of, there is a subreddit for it: r/ncaaBallStreams - College basketball/CFBStreams - College football/nflstreams - National Football League/MLBStreams - Major League Baseball/NHLStreams - National Hockey League/nbastreams - National Basketball Association/MMAstreams - Mixed martial arts streams I think you get the idea. The list is practically endless. I want to warn you just one more time... these sites are often very shady with lots of ads, lots of pop-ups, and my AVG virus scanner goes nuts sometimes blocking viruses and trojan horses. Proceed at your own risk! Lastly, and this is unrelated, one of the fun things about watching these streams is that you often get satellite feeds and they include the conversations the broadcasters have when they aren't broadcasting to the world. I once listened to Al Trautwig, a long time commentator during Knicks games, have this mundane conversation about whether or not to do the next reporting shot sitting or standing. I don't know why I enjoyed hearing it but it was better than another ad! How to Watch PGA Tour Events The major championships have their own websites where they broadcast various featured groups and holes throughout the tournament. There are four major championships and here are their websites: The Masters - U.S. Open - Open Championship - PGA Championship - As for the non-majors, google the name to see if they offer a live stream or you can rely on Reddit. How to Watch the World Cup Matches The relevant sub-reddit for the World Cup will be the Soccerstreams reddit - /r/soccerstreams/ - and it does a good job of listing the active games. If you don't mind dealing with a trial, Hulu is going to be your best option for streaming every single game online (our review of Hulu Plus. They have them all and they have a free trial so you can watch them during the trial and cancel before paying. You get the World Cup on FOX and FS1 plus 50+ other Live & on-demand channels. How to Watch March Madness Games Want more reliable streaming options without the pop-ups, spam, and viruses? It won't be free, but it's pretty cheap. DirecTV NOW is running a promotion where you can get their service for 3 months for just $10 with the promotion code YESNOW3. We did a review of DirecTV NOW and their base package includes TNT, TBS, TruTV, and CBS - all the channels you'd need to watch the NCAA Men's Basketball March Madness tournament. The tournament lasts just a few weeks so you'll have extra months to enjoy the programming. $10 to watch the games? You can't beat that deal. The service will renew at full price, which is $35 per month, after the first three months unless you cancel. Learn More about DirecTV Now Enjoy! Ask Media Group | Logo & Photo Courtesy: ESPN+ Press Room, Promotional Image With new streaming services launching every other month, it feels a lot like companies are reinventing cable packages via the so-called "streaming wars." As a result, many of us have multiple subscriptions, namely because it's hard to capture all of our streaming interests in one fell swoop. That is, there's no superior, all-inclusive platform. And that's kind of by design. Instead of bundling up with larger companies, some networks are creating their own subscription models for viewers, enticing them further with exclusive clips, shows, and movies that can't be seen on the standard cable channel. One of those networks is ESPN. For sports fans, ESPN+ is a perfect addition to their streaming subscription list. With original shows and live events, ESPN+ offers more than just what's "in season." Here's everything you need to know about this sports-centric streaming service, from its offerings and price points to some worthwhile bundling options. ESPN+ , a joint venture with ESPN and its parent companies, Disney and Hearst Communications, has been lauded as a great subscription add-on for sports fans. While ESPN+ officially launched in April 2018, more and more folks are finally cutting their cable cords and looking for the best ways to stream live sports. As of March 31, 2021, the services reported roughly 13.8 million subscribers — and that number has continued to climb. Photo Courtesy: Christopher Capozziello/Zuffa LLC/Getty Images So, what does ESPN+ offer? The paid streaming service provides subscribers with access to news, sports radio, podcasts, and other programs that are not available on ESPN's cable channels. In addition to viewing archived and live content, subscribers can also explore ESPN Insider content on ESPN.com, as well as a condensed, digital version on the SportsCenter roundup each day. The streaming service boasts thousands of exclusive live events, original studio shows, and acclaimed series, including the network's acclaimed (and long-running) 30-for-30 documentary series. By July, the landmark docuseries The Last Dance will join other hit series, like Long Gone Summer, on ESPN's platform. Looking for more content from athletes and analysts? Your search ends here. The platform is packed with brand-new originals, including NBA Rooks, which follows the National Basketball Association's rookies over their inaugural seasons; The Boardroom with KD, Kevin Durant's show that focuses on the business side of sports; Peyton's Places, former NFL quarterback Peyton Manning's show, which delves into the National Football League's history; and Detail, a show that features top athletes breaking down game footage. Photo Courtesy: ESPN/YouTube Subscribers can also access game replays, select ESPN films, live events, and, of course, popular pay-per-view events — something that's a real win for Ultimate Fighting Championship (UFC) fans. Moreover, viewers can tune into cricket, rugby union; soccer, including out-of-market Major League Soccer matches; golf, including coverage of the PGA Championship; tennis; and various college sports. Interested in National Hockey League (NHL) and Major League Baseball (MLB) games? These out-of-market sports packages are also sold through the platform as add-ons, which makes things all the more convenient for subscribers. However, it's important to note that an ESPN+ subscription does not give you access to stream ESPN's traditional TV networks or the content on them. According to ESPN's website, you'll still need a television subscription through a cable, satellite, or digital provider to stream those networks. Photo Courtesy: Bloomberg/Getty Images Best of all, it's easy to access the service. For example, you can watch ESPN+ content right on your browser after you log in to your account from the ESPN+ website. Content is also available to stream in HD through the ESPN App and on ESPN.com.Streaming via a device? The service can be accessed with ease through a Smart TV — Roku, Samsung TV and Amazon Fire TV, for example. Folks can also rely on their Chromecasts, PlayStation 4 or 5, Xbox One or Xbox Series S/X for access. Moreover, those who have smartphones or tablets can download the ESPN+ App to watch content wherever they go. Starting August 2021, new subscribers can get an ESPN+ subscription for $6.99 per month — or save over 15% with an ESPN+ Annual Plan, which comes in at $69.99 per year. These prices will also apply to viewers who subscribed to the platform before August 12, 2020, despite previously paying $4.99 per month. Logos & Photo Courtesy: Hulu, Disney+ & ESPN+ Another option worth considering? Because the Walt Disney Company has controlling stakes in both ESPN and Hulu, new subscribers can choose to bundle ESPN+ with Disney+ and Hulu. Currently, ESPN+ can be bundled with Disney+ and ad-supported Hulu for $13.99 per month. If commercials are a "no go" for you, you can also opt into the no-ads version of this bundle, which comes in at $19.99 per month. Finally, if you want to access Hulu + Live TV, you can bundle all three services for $72.99 per month. This is a great way to save on your subscription costs, but it's important to note that while this is a convenient way to pay for three services, you'll still need to access each of these individual platforms on their own apps and/or sites. Finally, you can purchase an annual ESPN+ digital gift subscription card for someone else. This gift card can only be used to redeem an annual ESPN+ subscription, which means it can't be used to make additional purchases, nor can it be used toward a Disney/Hulu bundle. Moreover, in order to redeem a gift subscription, the recipient must be a new ESPN+ subscriber. ESPN's popular docu-series "The Last Dance" will finally arrive on ESPN+ in July 2021. Photo Courtesy: ESPN/IMDb If you want extensive access to sports news, games, shows, documentaries, and more from ESPN, ESPN+ is a great investment. At $6.99 per month, you'll plenty of bang for your buck. However, since the content is all centered around sports, this service probably won't replace your traditional cable provider by itself — well, unless you only watch ESPN content regularly. On the other hand, the Disney bundle offers a compelling package for folks who want to diversify their sports intake with movies, TV shows and more.The bottom line? Sports fans will find a lot to love here, but, regardless of your preferences, ESPN+ is probably more of a supplemental service than a stand alone attraction. Morgan Engel/NCAA Photos/Getty Images Looking to cut out your monthly cable bill without having to sacrifice your favorite sports? If so, FuboTV might be the perfect solution for you. Of the many streaming services available these days, FuboTV has one of the most impressive collections of sports channels available. So, what, exactly, does this streaming service offer — and do those offerings set it apart from the competition? We're doing a deep dive. When FuboTV first launched back in 2015, it attracted sports fans pretty immediately. Among the service's earliest strengths? Its focus on soccer — a sport with huge international appeal. But, over the years, FuboTV has evolved further. Now, it boasts channels dedicated to the following: Major League Soccer (MLS), the National Hockey League (NHL), the National Football League (NFL), the National Basketball Association (NBA), Major League Baseball (MLB), and the National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing (NASCAR). Photo Courtesy: Carmen Mandato/Getty Images In addition to the best of men's professional sports leagues and teams, FuboTV also offers a wide array of golf, tennis, boxing, MMA (mixed martial arts), and college sports offerings. And, unlike most major mainstream sports networks, the service consistently offers access to women's professional sports leagues, including the Women's National Basketball Association (WNBA) and the National Women's Soccer League (NWSL). All of this to say, with access to local, national, and international sports, FuboTV ensures that you'll never miss out on any match, game, race, championship, or Olympic event ever again. Even though FuboTV is strong in the sports department, it also includes a variety of channels that the whole family will enjoy. In fact, as far as channel offerings go, FuboTV has one of the most inclusive collections of channels among other similarly-priced streaming services and even includes access to local channels. With a subscription, you'll also get access to channels like ABC, NBC, FOX, and much, much more. Photo Courtesy: Tom Hogan/Golden Boy/Getty Images Another great perk? Each of the service's plans comes with a minimum of 250 hours worth of Cloud DVR space, so if you aren't around to watch your favorite team or TV show, you can plan ahead. If two shows or games are competing for your family's attention, don't fret. One FuboTV subscription can be enjoyed on three different screens at the same time. FuboTV also offers a large list of add-on options, which can be good or bad, depending on how much you're looking to spend. That said, some of the many add-on options include: Premium channels, such as STARZ, Showtime, AMC Premiere, and EPIX Sports Plus with NFL RedZone International Sports Plus Up to 1,000 hours of DVR storage space Several different packages that feature French-, Spanish-, and Portuguese-language programming As far as pricing goes, FuboTV offers three different subscription options. First up, there's the starter, which offers 115 channels, 130+ events in 4K, up to 250 hours of Cloud DVR storage space, and up to three screens of simultaneous viewing. Want to take it for a test drive before locking into that $65 per month level? FuboTV offers a free week trial of the starter package. Photo Courtesy: Inti Ocon/Getty Images If you're looking to add in movie channels, you can upgrade to FuboTV Elite for $79.99 per month. It comes equipped with 162 channels, 130+ events in 4K, 47 entertainment channels, 1000 hours of Cloud DVR space, and up to 10 screens of simultaneous viewing. Whether or not the upgrade is worth it depends on whether or not you're interested in the extra channel offerings — and the number of folks in your household who will be tuning in to all FuboTV has to offer. Finally, if you're looking for a great bundle with Spanish-language channels, then Fubo's Latino Quarterly is definitely worth a try. It comes with 32 channels, 100+ sporting events, 250 hours of Cloud DVR storage space, and three-screen simultaneous viewing. It breaks down to a cost of $33 per month, but it's billed in four quarterly installments of $99 each. So, how does FuboTV stack up? Well, if you're just looking to enjoy basic channels, like ESPN, TNT, and Disney, then you might be better off with Sling TV's Orange package. With a little over 30 channels, Sling's bundle offers a collection of programming that emphasizes sports and a few popular family channels — all for just $35 per month. Photo Courtesy: Jeff Bottari/Zuffa LLC via Getty Images Quality and price-wise, FuboTV's two main competitors are Hulu + LiveTV and YouTube TV. In fact, both services have recently adjusted their rates to match Fubo's basic package. With this in mind, the only thing separating the cost of these services might just be those add-on features. YouTube TV offers a selection of 85+ channels, including NBC, ABC, ESPN, NFL Network, Nickelodeon, and more. Overall, it offers a pretty thorough mixture of news, sports, and kid-friendly channels. As far as local channels go, you can enter your zip code on the YouTube TV homepage to check out a full list of the channels available in your area. And, in terms of add-ons, YouTube TV also offers the perks of unlimited DVR storage space at no extra charge, three simultaneous streams and six accounts per household. If you don't mind commercials, Hulu + LiveTV Live will run you about $65 per month, as we mentioned above. But if ads really ruin your experience, you can opt into a commercial-free experience for $71.99 per month. Additionally, Hulu + LiveTV offers access to 65+ live and on-demand channels as well as Hulu's full streaming library. With a great mix of sports, entertainment, news, and local TV offerings, you may want to plug your zip code in to see if Hulu + LiveTV has the leg up on YouTube TV or FuboTV. While sports fans might lean toward FuboTV, we recommend checking out our more extensive cable-cutting guide if you're serious about rethinking how you access — and how much you pay for — TV.
